

After 36 years of service, I began cultivating the right side of my brain ...

Doyle retired in January 2005 and wasted no time before fully immersing himself into his art. He has put as much effort into his second career as a Watercolor Painter as he did with engineering, which has resulted in a lot of success with the Oregon Watercolor Society, winning “Best of Show” in one show. He creates sensitive paintings that are a derivative of his precise left-brain engineering background combined with the magic inherent in the imprecise mingling and flowing of watercolors. He continues to “loosen-up” and is now getting into more shows on the west coast. He recently created a website for his paintings, www.doyleleek.com.
